Girl Play video game. Problem: My girl is constantly peeing. First it was really mild and I thought that was just because she was learning how to walk at the time. But now it's happening almost every day. And she cannot make it go away. My Guess: I'm guessing that it's just because she's learning to walk and it's natural to pee. And the wet pants she's getting all the time is because she's learning to walk and changing from her diapers. My Questions: So if this is what's happening, do I just let it go and keep wiping her off everytime after she pees, just as I would in the meantime? She's sleeping in her pee all the time and laying on pee-soaked clothes. But at night, I feel like she does, or could, have an accident. I can't just leave her alone because I'm afraid that she'll wet herself. But I know that's just a fear thing, and I really need advice. I know it sounds a bit weird... but it's always been fine this way. Hi, Cindi. Is your daughter going to be potty trained soon? Possibly yes, possibly no. If she is not going to be trained soon, she will need to learn to go to the bathroom. Until then, you can teach her to go when she feels like she needs to, and you won't have to worry about accidents. Because she's been wearing pull-ups or a diaper that makes it hard to go, her bladder is very full. When you wipe her down, you are helping her learn to pee, and as she gets older and stronger she will get better at controlling it. But as long as she is able to control it, there's no reason to worry. If she can't yet, don't worry. I have a five-year-old daughter who is going to be potty trained soon. I don't have a problem with her having to go, but I will also be teaching her to wipe herself after she is done. Once she goes to school, it will be harder to
